September.

Next him September marched eke on Yet was he hoary, laden with the spoil Of harvest riches, which he made his boot. And him enriched with bounty of the soil.

The Month's Name.

When the year began in March, as the seventh month, September was properly named, but when the calendar was seventh morth. September was properly named, but when the calendar was changed by placing two months before March, the name, like those of the three following months. October, November and December, seems inappropriate, but through all the mutations these names have not been changed, as others have, though Julius Caesar added a day to September, which Augustus again took away, and it has since had only the Augustan quota, In old English days this month was called "Gerstmonat." or barley month, because of the barley harvest,

September Saints.

September Saints.

The history of September saints is especially interesting, and none of them more so than that of St. Cuthbert, whose fete day is September 4th. An ancient Northumbrian legend represents St. Cuthbert forging beads for the faithful to use as rosaries, scated high on a rock of Holy Island, and using an opposite rock for an anvit. These so-called beads have a hollow center and bear a fanciful resemblance to a cross. They are shown by modern science to be joints of the articulated stems of crenoids. The shore is strewn with them after storms, and Sir Walter Scott mentions the legend of "St. Cuthbert's Beads" in the following lines from "Marmion":

"On a rock, by Lindisforne, Saint Cuthbert sits and tolls to frame The sea-born beads that bear his anme; Such tales had Whitby's fishers told, And had they might his shape behold, And hear his anvil sound;
A deadened clang, a huge, dlin form, Seen but and heard when gathering storm And night were closing 'round."
